Richard Castaldi Fights Losing Battle On Prince Georges Budget Issues

Richard J. Castaldi is the elected county councilmember from the fourth councilmanic district, which includes Greenbelt, Bowie, Glenn Dale and other areas in the north-western portion of the county. He is presently serving his second year as chair of the county council, a position to which he was elected by the nine council members.

Castaldi is a life-long resident of Greenbelt, the son of Edward and Marie Castaldi. Currently he resides in Greenbrook Estates with his wife, Ann, and daughters, Lisa and Tina. Ann Gordon Castaldi is the councilmember's administrative assistant.

Until his election to the county council in 1982, Castaldi worked for the Maryland-National Capital Park and Planning Commission and was supervisor of zoning information and permits at the time he left this job of 20 years. Also at the time of election, Castaldi had completed his tenth year as a member of the Greenbelt City Council and his first year as mayor.

As chair, Castaldi has become a more vocal member of the county council, taking positions that have irritated a variety of interest groups, were contrary to the requests of County Executive Parris Glendening and, most recently, were not supported by the majority of council. In a far-ranging, two-and-one-half hour interview, Castaldi discussed his position on various issues before the county and his relationships with the county executive, councilmembers and others.

This is the first of a series of articles based on that interview.

by James Giese

Budget Issues

By a 5 to 4 vote, the county council adopted the county executive's budget with minor change, adopted a 20% increase in the county's "piggy-back" income tax, and increased by 2.5 cents the property tax rate for recreation in order to provide capital improvements, primarily in the districts of the five council members in the majority. Castaldi, who voted with the minority, was principal spokesperson for the opposition.

When asked how he felt about being on the losing side, Castaldi responded, "Well, it remains to be seen if I was on the losing side." He strongly believes that the recession is not over and that there is a need for the county to cut back on its expenditures and re-examine the way it does things. He is concerned with potential financial problems in Fiscal Year (FY) 1994, the financial year that begins July 1, 1993, and ends June 30, 1994.

"Who is to say who is right or wrong on this?" Castaldi continued. "I thought what I did was right. I hope to heck I'm wrong. I didn't want to make decisions to fire people or cut programs."

Economic Concerns

Castaldi notes that state budgeters are projecting a half-billion dollar deficit for FY 1994 if current levels of revenues and expenditures remain flat. "I am concerned about the economy," he explained. "Residential new construction is way down, according to the Southern Maryland Homebuilders' Association. The commercial construction market is zilch."

"I think we have world economic problems. Oil prices may go up and if they do it could cause serious problems. Because of the election, I think the federal government is tweaking every figure that it can. After the election, the bottom may fall out."

"The state collects 50 percent of its sales tax in three or four months of the year—during the Christmas shopping season. If it's bad, we're in trouble."

Castaldi attributes his fiscal conservatism to his experience on the Greenbelt city council. "We made sure that we didn't spend more than we received."

County Deficit

The county's financial problems began in FY 1991 when mid-year projections indicated that it was spending $97 million more than it was taking in. At that time, council met with the executive to determine how the problem could be rectified, according to Castaldi. "The execu-

Schrom Hills Park Dedicated On Greenbelt Day, June 7

by Betsy Likowski

It was an afternoon of free food, fun and family entertainment on Greenbelt Day, Sunday, June 7, at Schrom Hills Park. In a short program that started at 1:30 p.m. the park was dedicated, the 55th anniversary of Greenbelt was celebrated, and a special David R.S. Craig scholarship was awarded.

Having the traditional Greenbelt Day celebration in Greenbelt's newest park meant Greenbelters got a look at the beautiful park and its facilities, such as the formally planted and paved walk known as an allee, the two ballfields, and the two playgrounds.

As Mayor Gil Weidenfeld said in a speech dedicating the park, of the 47 acres in the park more than two-thirds remain as natural woodland and more than 400 trees have been planted. Four large trees stood around the park buildings. Two are champion trees, among the largest of their species and they were saved during construction of the park.

A county champion Deodor Cedar served as a picturesque backdrop to the ceremonies. The members of the Greenbelt Concert Band were fortunate enough to sit in its shade, but most of the audience sweltered in the mid-day sun. A plaque for the park was unveiled at the foot of the cedar by members of the Greenbelt city council.

"We remember the historical significance of this site," said Weidenfeld. Here on the Schrom family farm sprang up a small airport. A small historical display of this was in one of the park buildings.

Weidenfeld went on to speak about the 55th anniversary of Greenbelt. Greenbelt is "a very successful experiment," he said and has "made an outstanding contribution in (the field) of city planning."

A special presentation of the David R.S. Craig Memorial Scholarship was then made. Craig, a former Recreation Department employee, and Greenbelt resident, was "the kind of person that makes Greenbelt what it is—active, involved," said presenter Gary Hibbs. Presented since 1987 to a college-bound former Eleanor Roosevelt student, the $1000 scholarship was presented to Tim Foster. Foster remembered that his friend "David meant a lot to me." Foster said he went back to school two years ago at age 28. He finishes up an AA degree at Garrett County Community College and will go on to Frostburg State College.

After the ceremonies the band performed and the 100 plus people in attendance continued to enjoy their day at the park.

Performance of "Goldilocks" Challenges Cast of 30 Kids

by Barbara Likowski

The Greenbelt Arts Center scored again with their children's production of "The Trial of Goldilocks" on Saturday and Sunday in Center School. The play by Joseph Robinette gave an interesting new twist and a funny look at an old familiar nursery tale. We had Goldilocks on trial for her well-known missteps in the home of the bears.

This time we had three versions of what happened with very good bears, very baaad bears and, of course, the ones we all knew about. There were three Goldilocks, too.

What was so outstanding about this play about a simple tale was the numbers of children who took part. All seemed to strive to do their best. If we couldn't hear well now and then, that was a minor thing and easily correctable when these children get more experience. The fact that so many children worked together and were willing and able to try new things was truly impressive. How many children, for example, participate in choral reading? This came over very well.

So many children, about 30, did so much that we can't begin to show our appreciation for their work by name. But we must mention Jordan Wigdor, who as the clerk of the court almost stole the show. Almost, we say, because too many others, while not giving such a polished performance, nevertheless stood out in one way or another. All three Goldilocks, Kateri Hull, the defendant Goldilocks; Abby Logsdon, the brat Goldilocks; and Kerry O'Neill, the good Goldilocks aptly showed us different sides of the same(?) person, as did the three sets of bears. We were especially entertained by the baaad, jazzy, walkman-carrying bears.

It is the director, Ginny Zan-ner, who brought this motley crew together and helped fashion a show that was entertaining, funny and delightful. With Ginny's help the children not only learned to act and to try new ways of acting, they also helped with the technical side of the production. She is to be commended for a splendid job. With these new skills we can expect to see many of these children again in other productions.

This was a fitting program to be part of the Greenbelt Day weekend celebration, a joyous time for all Greenbelters of all ages.

For those who missed this play, it is not too late to catch it. A free performance will be given at Beltway Plaza Mall on June 13 at 2 p.m.

Monumental Brass Strikes New Notes over Blue Water

by James Giese

More than 200 spectators heard a lot of oom pah pah and yaah taah, ya ta ta tah beside the shimmering crystal blue waters of the Greenbelt swim pool on Saturday, June 6 and they thoroughly enjoyed themselves. The occasion was the third annual Greenbelt Day Concert sponsored by the Greenbelt Arts Center in cooperation with the Greenbelt Recreation Department. The able performers were the Monumental Brass Quintet, a group of Artists-in-Residence at the Levine School of Music.

This was the first time I had been to a concert at the pool, a very pleasant, although unique setting. The performers noted that it was quite different from their usual concert hall habitat. The group played under the canopy at the deep end of the pool, which meant that directly in front of them was nothing but water. The audience sat alongside the pool in chairs and on blankets, while a few sat on the turn wall or at the back of the pool. The pool itself was closed for swimming, which was OK with me, considering the water temperature, but if it had been warmer, I would have wished to hear the concert while floating on an inner tube.

While not a band shell, the pool location at least has a roof and a partial wall to direct the sound towards the audience. However, with Greenbelt's soundmaster Kenny Voigt on hand and ample amplification, sound was not a problem, except for those who chose to sit directly in front of a speaker.

Tom Renahan of the Arts Center, in brief intermission remarks, referred to the event as being a moonlight concert, which is alright, I guess, except that the moon didn't make its appearance until after the concert ended. He just as easily could have called it a sunset concert as it began at dusk, but from where I was sitting, you couldn't see the sunset either.

I do not pretend to be a music critic, and anything I say should take into consideration that my only musical qualifications are five years of piano lessons, after which I still could not play "Chopsticks," and a one semester music appreciation course taken to get easy college credits. Based on the enthusiastic applause of the audience, however, many of whom were distinguished members of Greenbelt's intelligentsia and the quintet's professional appearance in white and black formal wear I guess they were pretty good.

Opening Fanfare

The concert opened with the Olympic Fanfare in recognition of Greenbelt's swimming pool. The quintet then played five renaissance dances, followed by two baroque pieces. As the concert progressed, the music became more modern, with two jazz pieces, "Tin Roof Blues" and "Little Brown Jug," preceding the grand finale of John Philip Sousa's "Washington Post March." Most of the program pieces had to be adapted for the brass quintet; however, the group played three pieces for brass quintet written by contemporary Maryland composer Ray Sprenkels.

I was particularly impressed with how well the "Little Fugue in G Minor," an organ piece by J. S. Bach, was adapted to the brass quintet, as well as the first movement of Mozart's "Eine Kleine Nacht Musik," a piece written for stringed instruments. However, when it comes to the "Washington Post March," a quintet will never replace any one of our military service bands.

My criticism, such as it is, is that I felt that on some of the pieces the group seemed to play at a slower pace and with less enthusiasm than I would have liked. For me, this was particularly true of Pacobel's "Canon," a piece made well known by the Canadian Brass Quintet, and the three pieces from Gershwin's "Porgy and Bess."

And if any of the musical experts from Greenbelt think that I don't know what I'm talking about, please volunteer to be a music critic for the News Review.

John Barber, a close buddy of the late Private Richard A. Skinner, a Greenbelt veteran who lost his life in Vietnam on August 10, 1966, wishes to get in touch with members of Richard's family.

According to the obituary which appeared in the News Review on August 18, 1966, Private Skinner, age 20, was the son of Mr. and Mrs. William Skinner, 14-A Crescent Road. He attended High Point High School for three years and left school to join the Marine Corps. He was stationed at Camps LeJeune and Quantico before going overseas.

In addition to his parents, Richard was survived by his wife, Barbara, whom he married in April 1966, his sister, Marilyn, and brothers, Sgt. Raymond Thomas Skinner, who was stationed at Cha Lai, Viet Nam, and Gerald of Silsbee, Texas.

Anyone knowing the whereabouts of any of the above family members please contact Emory A. Harman, 204 Lastner Lane, or phone (301) 474-5156.

Greenbelt Greens Plan Summer Events

The Greenbelt Greens will make plans for participating in the 1992 Labor Day Festival, and hear from wildlife enthusiasts concerning hunting, at the June monthly meeting to be held in the Library meeting room from 7 to 9 p.m. on Monday, June 15. The decision on whether or not to sponsor a booth and recycling barrels will be made at this meeting, based on the number of volunteers that will be available. Anyone who cannot attend this meeting but wants to help the Greens promote recycling at the Labor Day Festival is urged to contact Doug Love before the meeting at 474-8663.

The Greens' quarterly business meeting will be held Sunday evening at 6 p.m. on June 14 at Doug Love's house, 3-D Plateau Place. Plans will be made for future meetings and projects such as ballot access, recycling and peace and justice issues.

Everyone is welcome at both meetings, but the monthly Monday night meetings are shorter and more focused. They are usually held the third or fourth Monday of each month, and often feature interesting and provocative speakers. A poetry reading is still being planned, and a garden party is expected in late summer.

untary contributions will be accepted for the evening's beneficiary, Mazon.

Mishkan Torah is located at 10 Ridge Road. For further information call Robert Goldberg-Strassler, (301) 345-8755. Reservations are suggested.

tive was the leader." Even though there were spending cut-backs, the county ended the year with a $77 million deficit.

To deal with the problem, the council agreed to the executive's recommendation to raise the tax rate by five cents. "We went to New York and showed the bond rating agencies how we were going to reduce the deficit," Castaldi related. "We devised a game plan. It was cut, cut."

In the fall, the state, which was having its own financial problems, began hitting the county with cuts, too. Castaldi stated that the council became concerned, because it knew that employee pay increases had been deferred to the last quarter of the fiscal year and would impact upon the next year's budget. "There was a big forum at the University on cutting the budget. It was planned that there would be layoffs of 150 people for January." Then the county received another $20 million cut-back in aid and grants from the state.

Deferral of Pay Increases

According to Castaldi, council unanimously agreed that it was necessary to defer the April pay increases, and so advised Glendening in a letter. However, Glendening began to change direction from the course of action agreed to in the fall. "We became concerned," Castaldi said, "when the executive didn't announce the layoffs planned for January."

Instead of taking the council recommendation to defer all pay increases, Glendening began to negotiate with the labor organizations to revise and cut back their pay agreements with the county. "I didn't feel we should be negotiating," Castaldi continued. "We needed to see where we would be on revenues and expenditures first."

Eventually the council enacted a council bill, OB-13, to freeze all raises. The county had been given temporary authority by the state to set aside collective bargaining contracts as an emergency recession-fighting measure, and this was the authority used to enact the freeze bill. There was a lot of union pressure to oppose this bill and Castaldi noted that two council members, Jo Ann T. Bell and Hilda Pemberton, did not vote for OB-13 when the council adopted it.

Piggy-Back Tax Increase

Castaldi related that the council also wrote a letter to Glendening advising him that the budget should not provide for the piggy-back tax increase. Previously, Glendening had been on record that he would not seek such a tax increase, but the council became concerned when Glendening went to Annapolis to support the legislation authorizing counties to increase the income tax levy.

"Right before the budget, Glendening sent the council a letter advising that he intended to propose the piggy-back tax increase. The council was furious," Castaldi stated. "Some members wanted to send the executive's budget back to him."

Budget Revision

Castaldi and some of the other council members were also upset later on when the executive revised the estimate of state assistance cuts from $13 million to $7 million. "We should have saved it. Instead he spent it," Castaldi complained. The executive proposed using the added $5.5 million to beef up the police department and provide relief to municipal taxpayers faced with sharply increased county tax rates. These rates were rising as a result of reduced county tax differentials under a formula that reduces the county tax rate in municipalities in recognition of services they provide but that are performed by the county in unincorporated areas.

"I thought that we were in a recession," Castaldi said. "When the budget goes from $950 million to $1.023 billion, there is no recession indicated."

Majority Shifts

Castaldi then spearheaded a council resolution, CR-58, to not approve the piggy-back income tax increase. It became apparent, however, that majority support was slipping away. When the resolution finally came up for a vote a few days before the council enacted the budget, it lost by a 5 to 4 vote. Joining Pemberton and Bell were council members Stephen Del Giudice, Frank Casula and James Fletcher. This majority prevailed on all other budget votes, including the final vote to adopt the budget.

Recreation Tax Increase

When council adopted the budget for the Prince Georges portion of the Maryland-National Capital Park and Planning Commission, it increased the property tax rate for recreation by 2.5 cents in order to fund a number of capital projects, including a swimming pool and funding to help build a ball park to attract an AA or AAA baseball team in case the deal fell through for Bowie to build such a ballpark.

"The majority council members admitted that they were rewarding themselves for the tough vote on the piggy-back tax increase," Castaldi stated. "Some were new projects, not on the books before. They did it to appease the voters in their districts."

"They are paying for a baseball stadium that Bowie has already agreed to pay for," he continued. "There was no public demand for it, no one came to the public hearing to advocate it. I think baseball is great. It's a good thing to have. But is it needed? Does it come before education?" He further noted that a month earlier the council had unanimously voted against county funding for the facility and that Planning Board Chair John Rhoads had been opposed to the county's getting involved in financially supporting the facility.

On Cutting Budget

How would Castaldi have cut the budget to avoid the piggy-back income tax increase? "We only had to cut $26 million," Castaldi responded. "For you or me, that's a lot of money. But not when you are dealing with a billion dollar budget. I would have first looked at the areas in which the state had cut its $36 million in aid. Why didn't we leave those cuts there? There was one proposal to cut each budget 2% across the board—no more or less." Other ways in which he felt the budget could be cut were to defer or delete the $22 million in cost-of-living adjustments in the budget, reduce the number of paid holidays and reduce the size of the work force.

Independent Study

"We have lost a perfect opportunity to down-size government," Castaldi commented, noting that the size of the county government had increased substantially during the 1980's. He did advise that the budget contains funds for an independent study of county operations. We need an independent analysis of all aspects of government. "We missed this opportunity by deviating from the plan agreed to last summer and fall."

Castaldi also noted that the Board of Education had advised that, based upon the advice of its attorney, it would not cooperate with the undertaking of an independent study performed outside of the purview of the Board.

Summarizing his position on the budget, Castaldi stated, "I didn't change course or direction. I followed the course set out by the council and executive last summer, this fall, and into January."

Bonsai Programs

Bonsai enthusiasts will be able to participate in two different programs sponsored this month by the National Arboretum, 3501 New York Avenue in the District of Columbia. On Saturday, June 13 David DeGroot, curator of the Pacific Rim Bonsai Collection, will present a demonstration lecture on styling bonsai plants. A representative of the Weyerhaeuser Company of Federal Way, Washington, De Groot is scheduled to speak from 1-4 p.m. in the Arboretum's Administration Building.

On Sunday, June 14 and June 28, a basic demonstration of styling and potting bonsai will be given at 1:30 p.m. at the Yoshimura Center by a knowledgeable bonsai enthusiast.

Thefts
